SESSION SUBJECT

The Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) provide a comprehensive and internationally recognized framework established by the United Nations to address complex and interrelated global challenges spanning social, economic, and environmental dimensions. Achieving these goals requires robust evidence-based approaches capable of supporting informed decision-making across diverse domains, including public health, education, environmental sustainability, energy systems, urban development, and social equity.

Applied Statistics plays a central role in this context by enabling the collection, analysis, interpretation, and communication of data necessary to monitor progress, assess policy effectiveness, and manage uncertainty in complex systems. The special session Applied Statistics under SDG Context aims to bring together researchers and practitioners working on statistical methodologies and applications that contribute to the measurement, evaluation, and advancement of the SDGs, fostering interdisciplinary collaboration and promoting data-driven solutions to sustainable development challenges.
